The posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) syndrome is a set of symptoms that develop after a person has experienced a traumatic event in which death or grave injury is probable or expected. In many people, these symptoms last for months or years after the traumatic experience, but in some people, the symptoms may last a lifetime. The syndrome is now recognized as a mental illness that occurs after the acute traumatic stress of a significant traumatic event, and can develop in the wake of abuse and human trafficking, disasters, combat, natural and human-made disasters, accidents, and even routine events. People who suffer from this syndrome are often stigmatized, ignored, and/or left without adequate treatment or support. Posttraumatic stress disorder is not a diagnosis that occurs in isolation. It is often accompanied by other mental health problems, such as depression, anxiety, other substance use problems, or panic attacks. Symptoms of posttraumatic stress disorder can include flashbacks, avoidance of things that remind them of the traumatic event, irrational thinking, difficulty sleeping or sleeping more than usual, and problems with concentration.
