KEYMACRO allows you to make macros in many programs and run them with a single click from a hotkey. The use is as simple as typing a simple text into the field and assigning a hotkey. The macros are stored in the program's folder and can be run multiple times. The program runs as an overlay which has no effect in the program. No additional software or drivers are needed to use the macros. KEYMACRO has built-in recognition of hotkeys and can recognize most windows applications like WinXP/98/Me/2000. You can change the hotkeys, label, and other aspects of the macros by editing the *.ini file. You can also configure the behavior of the hotkeys. You can save your macros for future use. Limitations: KEYMACRO needs the Windows key to be pressed for recognizing and running macros. Keyboard Shortcuts are not recognized. It works in all languages and programs that support hotkeys. A single macro can have a maximum of 20000 characters. The program does not save the hotkey settings you change to the *.ini file. You have to manually change these settings. The program does not recognize hotkeys in MS Word and other office applications. Keyboard support is supported only in the following languages: English, German, Italian, Czech, and Russian. For Mac OS X version we have an option to use iMacros Lite, an alternative macro program, which can recognize keyboard shortcuts. Please note that KEYMACRO is not a replacement for an existing macro editor. It is an independent tool. Details: KEYMACRO has two modes: the IDE mode and the hotkey mode. In the IDE mode you can create macros with hotkeys or keyboard shortcuts and assign names to them. You can edit the hotkeys by using the toolbar. In the hotkey mode you can create macros and edit the hotkeys. In both modes you can create your macros and edit them from the Toolbar. Macro examples: Example in IDE mode: Hotkey mode:
