A brief description of Albert Bierstadt Albert Bierstadt (May 23, 1841 - July 11, 1902) was an American landscape painter, born in Germany, of whom is almost entirely self-taught. After leaving Germany in 1858, Bierstadt emigrated to the United States and settled in New York, where he taught himself to paint. He became a member of the National Academy of Design in 1865, but his work was not sufficiently acclaimed to support him, and he was forced to find work as a portraitist. However, his artistic development was now underway, and he began to devote himself more and more to the study of nature. Bierstadt's first exhibition in New York, in 1865, was a great success, and it opened up new artistic horizons for him. For the first time, he presented landscape paintings, as well as portraits, in which, for the first time, his unique, monumental style was evident. His breakthrough work was the great panorama "Valley of the Mississippi from the Missouri River to the Gulf of Mexico", and "The Grand Canyon of the Colorado River", the only painting in the Smithsonian American Art Museum ("Blue Grotto", 1871). Together with his mentor, Thomas Moran, Albert Bierstadt spent several summers at the Grand Canyon. With his friend Frederick Catherwood and his brother, Bierstadt left the United States for Europe in 1874. Bierstadt, however, soon returned to New York and continued to work and exhibit there. The painter's most celebrated works include the Old Man of the Mountain in North Park (1881), The Yosemite Valley (1884), The Boy on the Cliff (1885), the Yellowstone series (1888-89), and the many panoramas he created on Yellowstone Park. He is the creator of the Yellowstone-Columbia River panoramas, which formed the basis for many paintings for the American West in the late 19th century. Bierstadt was a talented geologist and a highly competent artist who created numerous scenes of the American landscape in an expressive and original way. Albert Bierstadt died in New York City at the age of 57, and was buried in the Woodlawn Cemetery there. His tombstone claims that he is "unquestionably the greatest artist America has produced".
