In a recent debate on dystonias, some authors have tried to define a "dystonic pathology" by referring to the usual medical practice, especially in individualized psychotherapy. They try to explain why, in some patients, dystonia presents as an expression of a psychological disturbance. They propose to add "dystonic" as a new section of ICD-10. But with the main reference being psychoanalysis, their idea is not based on solid evidence. As a matter of fact, if some psychotherapists do consider dystonia a pathological phenomenon, the objective would be to identify the unconscious meaning of certain symptoms and of the psychical reactions to the disorders leading to dystonia. In this sense, the very word "dystonia" fails to designate something with a precise anatomical localization, but
