No reason to downgrade, in fact you shouldn't downgrade. The upgrade to LR5 paid off as it was faster in the new version and was quicker to render previews. Also the comments feature of PS makes reviews a lot easier. Will continue to use LR6 than try to find a usable NRW converter. I cannot stress enough about how useful this feature is. I go to the Comments panel and start typing into the box where things can be added. Then when I save, it shows up as a comment and other people can see and respond. It's a great way for me to gather feedback and get input from others. I can think of lots of ideas, and I can also test those ideas. I invite colleagues to comment on idea tests. It's been mind-boggling how many ideas I have come up with through this method, and the best part is, I can either discard those ideas or take them up where they left off. I want to be able to click on a comment by a person in our team and have it bring up that person's comments. It looks like a good experience already, but it should be made standard, at least, if not included as a default. Second, it seems that the comments are not really added as part of the document object, meaning that they are not really part of the PSD. Rather, when I open the PSD, I see the comments added, but don't see them in the PSD panel. If the comments are really part of the PSD, I expect I would see them in the panel where I can sort projects, layers, panels, etc. That would make it a little more standardized as well.
