Using the new Adobe Camera Raw but by going beyond the usual settings is an excellent way to complete the picture adjustment of RAW images. But Adobe has not stopped there. YouTube videos I've watched this week show some impressive results from a number of photographers and filmmakers. These artists chose to not only complete the picture adjustment, but also perform a level of details adjustment and even an effect that incorporates a few old photos of the subject to fit it. Surely, it's too early to call Adobe's latest happenings a revolution in this area - and it may too early to hold your breath, but Lightroom 5 appears to be an excellent tool for image editing and even more so for photographers who convert from Adobe Camera Raw. The only point of disagreement is, whether this is a positive or a negative, according to the support of the developers.
