Prostate cancer (CaP) is the most common cancer in men in North America, and the second most common cause of death in men. Until the 1970s, CaP was considered a tumor of older men and rarely occurred in patients younger than 40 years old. However, the past 3 decades have witnessed a dramatic increase in the incidence of CaP in younger patients, especially among black men. Although androgen ablation is the only current treatment with proven efficacy in metastatic CaP, it does not cure this condition, and most patients ultimately relapse. More than half of such relapses are hormone-refractory, and patients with metastatic disease are treated with a systemic therapy. First-generation chemotherapeutic agents for metastatic CaP mainly consisted of orchiectomy (in combination with other agents in selected cases), androgen deprivation, and estrogens; however, none of them produced significant responses and a significant percentage of patients developed progressive or relapsing disease. During the past decade, high-dose chemotherapy with stem cell rescue has become available for patients with Ca
