I really appreciate how Adobe is trying to become more transparent now. They are continuously releasing service updates through Creative Cloud instead of big upgrades and new versions of the software. This is especially true to the new Photoshop. Adobe is trying to give users more control over their camera and files. This is not a bad thing. The Save For Web and Send to friends tools are a really good move. It will be interesting to see how this plays out in the future. Love the new tools. Makes a lot of sense to be able to quickly create and start editing a graphic design. I'm working with an iPhone 7 Plus, which is not quite the size of a notebook, but is the opposite of a tablet which allows to the device to become unwieldy when I'm working with the iPad Pro. But will have to be careful. The small screen size is not the biggy for this particular use case. The tablet may have problems holding the pencil when I need to write, but I can imagine if I have a laptop, the stylus could actually be used. But anyway, if the goal was to build a graphic tablet in the cloud, then I'm loving. More over, is it possible to add tools and plug-ins like the ones available in other apps? I have been participated in a video with Adobe product testing so I know it's possible to add new plugins and already have a track record with those coming from Adobe Creative Cloud. Right now you can only draw with the Apple Pencil for people who use the iPad Pro with the Pencil type. Adobe Photoshop does not have the ability to work with that computer. The Pencil is a little hard to keep in place on the screen while still being able to draw on it.

The application was introduced globally in October 2010 to the point that it has led a similar path as Google images. As a result, the storage of the user of its gorgeous photographs has triggered a wave of the Foursquare users worldwide.
